5. Social Action Projects

As you start engaging deeply with topics of interest and exploring the world around you, it's natural to want to 'make a difference' by undertaking social action projects.

Social Action Projects are a great way to support your local community, advocate for change, solve a problem, or raise money. You might want to tackle such programs as a group, or on your own.

By doing Social Action Projects, you demonstrate your ability to understand multiple perspectives, to take ethical action, and to develop your skills in problem-solving, collaboration and global citizenship, which are attributes that are highly valued by employers and further education institutions.

Here are some examples that previous students have done:

- Organising 'School students against climate change' protests
- Curating an art exhibition for artists with a disability
- Working with aged-care residents to write their life stories
- Participating in family/religious community fundraisers for refugees
- Cleaning up a local waterway
- Producing a short film about the problems with single-use plastics
- Taking part in on-country ranger programs to protect the local environment from pest and weed infestations
- Raising money to support the care of injured wildlife in the wake of bushfires.

PROPOSAL DETAILS

INFORMATION NEEDED FOR APPROVAL

What is the issue?

Lack of awareness surrounding nuclear energy and its effects on the economy and how renewable of a power source it is.

What is your plan to solve it, raise money or awareness?

Hold a seminar regarding nuclear power to inform people about the facts and what to do in case people wish to support nuclear energy.

Why have you chosen this?

Nuclear energy is something that I have a great interest in personally and wish to spread awareness about as Australia could benefit greatly from switching to nuclear fuel.

REFLECTIONS

Each time you work on your social action project, you will need to complete a reflection. Ensure you put the date each for each entry. This needs to be completed individually. You can use the space provided or keep a word document/OneNote page.

Reflections during the process could include:

- Why you feel strongly about this project/place/charity and what it means to you and the people you are helping.
- Contact you have made with companies/people/organisations
- What tasks you have already completed?
- Are you on track? Where to next?
- What are you excited about or looking forward to?
- What challenges have faced or do you think you will face?
- How well is your group (if in one) working together?

Reflections after the process could include:

- How well did your project go? How did it make you feel giving back?
- What would you do differently if you had your time again?
- What did you learn about from doing this project in terms of giving back to the community/raising money and/or awareness
- Who do feel you have made the most impact on and why?
- How could you continue to give back to this project/place/charity and why would this be important to you and them?
